

DIVERSITY

We are all different from other people. We have different interests, different inclinations, talents, different experiences and different psyches. So diversity should not refer exclusively to certain groups of people, but touch each of us. Respect for people is a permanent lesson that must be taught in the family from an early age. It is important not only to take care of our material needs but to show our respect and emphasize that we should never use physical or emotional violence for any physical or mental characteristic that a person may have.
